

[Interior, a small audition room. The director stands facing the actor, holding a clipboard. The actor is standing center stage, arms spread wide in a mock-heroic pose.]

Director: [smiling warmly] Well, what can I say? You've certainly brought a unique energy to the room today! I mean, those dance moves--I've never seen anything quite like it. It's like you were channeling a mixture of jazz hands and a confused flamingo. In the best way, of course!

[The actor drops the pose, listening intently with a playful grin.]

Director: And that monologue--you definitely took some creative liberties with Shakespeare. I think the bard himself would need a moment to wrap his head around "To be or not to be, that's like... totally the question, dude."

[The actor chuckles.]

Director: Unfortunately, we're going in a different direction for this role, mainly one that stays on script. But listen, I genuinely think you've got something special. Seriously, there's a certain charm in your unpredictability--like wondering if your next step will be a pirouette or a tumble.

[The actor nods theatrically, crossing their arms with mock seriousness.]

Director: So, while you might not be our Hamlet, you could certainly win "Best Supporting Actor in Life: The Comedy." Keep that spark alive, and who knows? Broadway might get a flamingo-fusion musical just for you!

[The director gives a nod and a wink, and the actor bows dramatically before exiting, still smiling widely.]
