

Certainly! Here is a simple example of a speech for rejecting a research proposal with an improvement-focused tone:

---

Dear [Researcher's Name],

Thank you for submitting your research proposal on [Research Topic]. We appreciate the thought and effort you have put into developing this idea. After a thorough review, we have decided not to move forward with your proposal at this time. However, we value your dedication to advancing knowledge in this field and would like to provide some feedback that we hope will be helpful as you continue to refine your research.

Firstly, while your research question is compelling, we recommend further clarifying your objectives and ensuring they are tightly aligned with your proposed methodology. Strengthening this connection will enhance the overall coherence of your study.

Additionally, expanding the literature review section to include more recent studies could provide a stronger foundation and highlight the relevance of your research. This will not only support your rationale but also showcase how your work fits within the current academic discourse. Finally, consider collaborating with colleagues or mentors who can offer additional perspectives, especially in areas where you might seek further expertise. This collaboration could provide new insights and strengthen both the scope and impact of your proposal.

We encourage you to revisit your research plan with these suggestions in mind and consider resubmitting in the future. We are keen to see how your ideas develop and genuinely appreciate your commitment to contributing to [Field of Study].

Thank you once again for your proposal, and we look forward to your next submission.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

[Your Position]

[Your Institution or Organization]

---