

Ladies and gentlemen,

Today, I stand before you to address a matter that impacts every student in our school--the proposed changes to the student council voting methods. Let's consider this carefully before rushing into a decision that could affect our representation and voice.

First, the current voting method is something we are all familiar with. It has been in place for many years and ensures a straightforward, direct, and transparent process. Why fix what isn't broken? Changing this method might lead to confusion among students, reduce participation, and ultimately, lessen the fairness of the election outcome.

Second, the new voting method might involve complex systems or technologies that not everyone is comfortable using. This could unintentionally exclude some students who are less tech-savvy, creating inequality in our voting process. Every student deserves an equal opportunity to have their voice heard, and altering the system could put this in jeopardy.

Lastly, the essence of student council elections is to foster leadership, responsibility, and democratic values. By complicating the voting process, we stray from these core principles. We need a system that encourages participation, not one that deters it.

In conclusion, I urge you to consider these points seriously. Let's preserve a voting method that is equitable, familiar, and straightforward. Let's be the champions of accessibility and fairness. Thank you for your attention and consideration.
