

Ladies and gentlemen,

Thank you for gathering here today to celebrate the christening of my wonderful little brother. Now, before he gets too comfortable with all the attention, let me take this opportunity to share a few thoughts. First off, let me say that [Brother's Name] is the cutest little bundle in the world--sure, he drools more than our family dog and naps more than our cat, but, we love him just the same.

My brother's entry into this world was like getting a surprise gift. You really hope it's something cool, and fortunately, he didn't disappoint--he's totally adorable and gives everyone in the family a worthy excuse to buy tiny clothes.

As he grows, I plan to share my infinite wisdom with him--a responsibility I don't take lightly. I'm talking about the really important stuff, like how to sneakily eat cookies before dinner and which Power Ranger is the coolest (definitely the Red one).

So today, as we celebrate [Brother's Name]'s christening, let's all promise to guide him, nurture him, and, of course, forgive him for all the times he'll scribble on the walls or accidentally flood the house. Thank you all for being here and for being a part of his life. Here's to [Brother's Name]--may his giggles be endless, his adventures be grand, and his diaper changes be swift.

Cheers!
