

Certainly! Here's a simple speech example for addressing a missed deadline with a collaborative solution tone:

---

Hello everyone,

I hope you're all doing well. I wanted to take a moment to address the missed deadline we had for the project. I understand this wasn't the outcome we aimed for, and I appreciate everyone's hard work leading up to it.

Let's come together to figure out the best way forward. I suggest we first identify what obstacles led to the delay. Understanding these challenges can help us find effective solutions and prevent similar setbacks in the future.

Once we pinpoint the areas of improvement, we can redistribute tasks or adjust timelines to get back on track effectively. I'm confident that, with our collective skills and commitment, we can turn this around quickly.

I'm open to any suggestions you all might have. Let's make sure we communicate openly and support each other as we address these issues. Thank you for your understanding and cooperation. Together, we can achieve our goal.

---

Feel free to adapt it to suit your specific context!