

Good morning, everyone,

Thank you for having me here today. My name is [Your Name], and I'm excited to talk to you about something incredibly important: planning your future career.

Now, I know that thinking about your career can be overwhelming. There are so many choices and paths you can take. But don't worry; you don't have to have it all figured out right now. The key is to start exploring your interests and develop skills that will be useful no matter what field you choose.

First, consider what excites you. Do you love art, solving math problems, writing, or helping others? Your interests can provide valuable clues about which careers might be right for you.

Next, think about building skills that are important in any career. Communication, problem-solving, and teamwork are skills that employers value in every field. Get involved in clubs, sports, or volunteer work to hone these skills.

Also, don't hesitate to reach out to your teachers, counselors, and even professionals in fields you're curious about. Ask questions, seek advice, and maybe even shadow someone in their job to get a closer look at what it involves.

Remember, your career path doesn't have to be a straight line. It's okay to change directions as you learn more about yourself and the world. The important thing is to stay curious, be open to new experiences, and keep learning.

Thank you, and best of luck as you explore your future possibilities!
