

Good evening, everyone!

Thank you for that warm welcome. Today, we are gathered here to celebrate the graduation of some incredibly bright minds. Or, as I've heard them refer to themselves, "future Instagram influencers."

First, let me congratulate the parents. You've done an amazing job.

You've supported these graduates, even during the times when they thought skipping class was a good idea because "you can't teach life experience."

Graduates, congratulations! You did it. You've survived all the exams, late-night study sessions, and somehow lived through four years of cafeteria food. Or as you might remember it, a chef's surprise--because it was always a surprise what you were going to get!

Let's give a big round of applause to our teachers as well. You've had the patience of saints. I mean, trying to teach calculus to half-asleep teenagers? That's something that deserves a medal. Or at least a lifetime supply of coffee.

Now, as you all embark on your next adventure, remember--life is like Wi-Fi. We're all looking for connection, sometimes it's not strong, and once in a while, you need to put it in airplane mode and reboot.

In closing, remember to follow your dreams, embrace failure (yes, really), and keep your sense of humor. It will help you through any challenge life throws at you. Trust me, the next chapter is going to be exciting!

Congratulations, Class of 2023! Go out there and make us laugh... and proud!

Thank you!
