

Ladies and gentlemen,

Wow, this is quite the surprise! I must say, when I first heard I was getting an award for excellence in service, I thought maybe it was a clever way of telling me I had spent way too much time at the office. But here we are, and what an honor this is!

First, I'd like to thank everyone who made this possible--my incredible team, who somehow manages to tolerate my endless supply of dad jokes in every meeting. And of course, thanks to the coffee machine, without which, let's face it, none of this would be possible.

I also want to give a shoutout to my family who supports my work--thank you for understanding whenever I bring office quirks home. Who knew a three-hour "strategic brainstorming session" could be successfully translated into deciding what's for dinner?

While I still worry every day someone might figure out that I'm just making it up as I go along, it's reassuring to know my blend of organized chaos is seen as worthy of such an award.

In all seriousness, serving alongside you is the real reward, and I am privileged to work with such talented and dedicated people. Let's keep up the hard work, the laughter, and yes, even the bad jokes.

Thank you all for this honor!
