

Ladies and gentlemen, if I could have your attention--I promise I won't talk for too long, as I know there's cake waiting for us. Just like a good dad joke: short, sweet, and a little bit awkward. Now, watching you two grow individually and together has been quite an experience. It seemed like just yesterday he couldn't find a matching pair of socks, and now he's found his perfect match in her! I can't quite give you the secrets to a happy marriage. But I can tell you this: always remember, when you're right, agree with her, and when you're wrong, apologize first! In all seriousness, you both complement each other beautifully, like peanut butter and jelly--except less sticky and way more romantic. Here's to your future, full of love, laughter, and joy. And remember: No matter how old you get, you'll always be my kid who leaves the lights on. Cheers to the soon-to-be-newlyweds!
