

Ladies and gentlemen, if I could have your attention for just a few moments. I promise to keep this brief and entertaining. After all, I'm not quite sure you want to hear me ramble on while there's still dessert to be had.

First of all, let's take a moment to appreciate the groom. Here's a man who once thought "ironing his clothes" meant leaving them out on a chair for a week. Yet, tonight, he stands before us looking dapper, thanks entirely to his lovely bride. [Pause for laughter.]

Now, onto the bride. She's brilliant, kind, and has an impeccable taste... except, of course, in marrying the guy who once tried to cook pasta without water. In all seriousness, she brings out the best in him, and I think even he would agree -- she's his better half. [Pause for more laughter.]

Jokes aside, seeing these two together is like watching the perfect waltz. They move so effortlessly, in sync, and with deep respect and love for one another. It's truly inspiring to witness their journey.

We're lucky to be here tonight to celebrate not just their love but the amazing support system they've built around them. Family, friends, each of you plays a part in their story, and how wonderful it is that we get to be chapters in their lives.

So, here's to laughter, love, and the wonderful journey ahead. May your life together be filled with moments that are as joyful as tonight, as well as glasses that are always half full.

To the bride and groom! Cheers!
