

Good morning, beloved congregation!

What a glorious Sunday it is to come together in fellowship and bask in the presence of the Divine. Today, as we gather in this sacred space, I invite each of you to pause and marvel at the wonders all around us. Think of the rising sun that greeted us this morning, painting the sky with hues of orange and gold, reminding us of the new mercies we receive each day. Consider the joy in the laughter of a child, the kindness of a stranger, and the love we share with one another--each a testament to the miracles woven into the fabric of our lives.

Let us be grateful for the breath in our lungs, the beating of our hearts, and the incredible gift of community we experience here. As we sing, pray, and reflect today, let us carry in our hearts a profound sense of gratitude for all that we have and all that we are yet to experience.

May our time together this morning inspire us to live lives full of gratitude, marveling at the world our Creator has so beautifully crafted for us to enjoy and cherish.

Amen.
