

Ladies and gentlemen, future leaders of the universe,
Thank you for having me at today's youth empowerment extravaganza--where the only thing more empowered than the youth is the Wi-Fi signal. We're here because you, yes, you, have the potential to change the world. Or at least get your little brother to finally wash the dishes.

Now, some people say the youth are lazy, but I beg to differ. You guys work harder than anyone-- on TikTok choreography, online gaming strategies, and mastering the art of dodging chores. Impressive skills, really. The truth is, you hold the keys to the future, and I'm pretty sure some of you actually have those keys on a USB-drive keychain.

To empower yourself, start by setting goals. Not just any goals, like "I will finish this Netflix series by tomorrow," but goals that seem impossible. Then work hard, because the only time success comes before work is in the dictionary.

Now, take a look around--a few years from now, these faces might be negotiating peace treaties, solving climate change, or inventing the next viral cat meme. The possibilities are endless!

So go out there, believe in yourselves, make mistakes, and learn from them--because as they say, failure is only the shortcut to success. But really, watch out for that shortcut; it can be a bumpy ride.

In conclusion, the world is ready for your ideas, your energy, and your creativity. And remember, if you're ever feeling down, just think of the chicken crossing the road: even that bird has a silly goal, and no one questions it!

Thank you! Keep being awesome! And if it gets too hard, just remember, Wi-Fi is like friendship--if it's not strong, you're going to feel it. Go out there and change the world!
