

Ladies and gentlemen,

Today I stand before you to discuss a matter of great importance: the establishment of a universal healthcare system. At its core, this policy is not just about numbers or budgets; it is about justice, fairness, and the ethical treatment of all individuals in our society.

Every citizen deserves the right to access essential healthcare services without the burden of financial hardship. However, our current system often leaves the most vulnerable among us without the care they need.

This is not just a policy issue--it is a moral obligation.

A universal healthcare system upholds the ethical principle that health is a fundamental human right. It embodies the values of equity and compassion, ensuring that our society is judged not by the wealth of the few, but by the well-being of all.

By implementing universal healthcare, we affirm our commitment to justice and equality, and we take a definitive step towards a more inclusive and humane future.

Thank you.
