

Hello everyone!

Today, I want to take you on a little journey. Imagine standing at the edge of a forest, the air brimming with opportunities and possibilities. That's what university felt like to me when I first arrived: an untamed wilderness full of potential discoveries.

Like any explorer, I set off on this adventure, armed with curiosity and a drive to learn. In the first year, the terrain was challenging. I stumbled upon obstacles disguised as pop quizzes and endless assignments. But, with each step, I gained strength and confidence.

During my second year, I discovered a passion--coding. It was like finding a beautiful hidden lake in the middle of the forest. The more I explored, the clearer it became: this is where I wanted to build my nest, my future.

Now, standing here as a seasoned adventurer, I am excited to pitch to you a project born from this journey--an app designed to make coding accessible to everyone, regardless of where they are in their own educational wilderness.

I invite you to join me as investors in both an idea and a mission.

Together, we can create a path that others can follow, making the daunting terrain a little less daunting for future explorers.

Thank you for considering this opportunity to journey with me. Let's blaze this trail together!
