

Title: A Fond Farewell to [Employee's Name]

Ladies and Gentlemen,

If I could have your attention for just a moment--yes, that means pausing the battle for the last donut--thank you. We are gathered here today to bid farewell to someone who has managed to survive [number] years of our office shenanigans and who, starting next week, will no longer be the subject of our endless coffee machine small talk--[Employee's Name]. Now, [Employee's Name], your presence in the office has been like our Wi-Fi: we were lost without it--even if occasionally we wondered why you were loading so slowly! Over your time here, you've completed [number] projects, or as we call it, mastering the art of looking busy while planning your next vacation.

Let's not forget the countless meetings. How you managed to stay awake and seemingly interested is still one of the great mysteries of our department. We never did discover your secret--was it caffeine, power naps, or simply daydreaming of a land far, far away where emails don't exist?

Your contributions such as [mention humorous or impressive work traits, e.g., "turning technical jargon into something we almost understand"] have left an indelible mark on our team. It's safe to say that this place won't be quite the same without you singing off-key during team lunches. Though we might be a little jealous of your future endeavors--in a land where you'll actually use all your accrued vacation time--we wish you the best of luck. Don't worry, we'll manage to survive the endless debates about whether ketchup belongs on a hotdog without your definitive insights.

In all seriousness, you'll be truly missed. Best of luck in your new adventure; don't forget us when you're famous--or at least when you find a printer that actually works the first time.

Here's to [Employee's Name], let's give them a send-off worthy of a company legend!

Thank you.
