

Certainly! Here's a simple example of a speech for internal promotion with a team-collaboration tone:

---

"Hello everyone,

Thank you all for gathering today. I'm excited to share some news about our team's next steps and to embrace a new role within our amazing team. As we move forward, I want to emphasize that this promotion is not just about one person, but about all of us working together and collaborating toward our shared goals.

In this new role, my mission is to continue fostering an environment where everyone feels empowered to contribute and innovate. Every idea matters, and every voice plays a crucial part in our success. I'm committed to ensuring our team truly thrives.

Let's keep communicating openly and supporting each other, as that's what makes our team so exceptional. I'm eagerly looking forward to achieving more milestones together, learning from each one of you, and celebrating our successes as a team.

Thank you for your hard work, your trust, and your support. Together, we can achieve great things!

Let's get started!"

---