

Ladies and gentlemen,

Today, I stand before you to propose a reform that will significantly improve our nation's education system. Our current policies have served us well, but it is time to take the next step forward.

I propose we implement a new policy that increases funding for technology in classrooms to ensure every student, regardless of their background, has access to the digital tools they need for success in the 21st century. This policy will include providing tablets and laptops, enhancing internet connectivity, and training teachers to integrate technology into their teaching methods.

By investing in these resources, we will not only bridge the digital divide but also empower our students to become innovative thinkers and problem-solvers.

Together, let's embrace this change to create a brighter future for our children. Thank you.
