

Ladies and Gentlemen,

As I stand here, I'm reminded of that famous saying: "Parting is such sweet sorrow." But let's be honest, it's mostly just sweet since it means I don't have to pretend to like Steve's infamous tuna surprise at lunch anymore!

I want to take a moment to reflect on the memories we've made. Like the time I accidentally "reorganized" Debbie's filing system while just trying to find a pen. Spoiler alert: I didn't find the pen, but I did find out that Debbie is scarily organized.

To my amazing team, thank you for the laughs, the support, and for covering for me that time I accidentally sent the office party invitation to the entire company instead of just our department. Who knew everyone loved karaoke so much?

And as I move on to the next chapter, I promise I won't forget about you. Mostly because I'll still be on the group chat, sending memes at inappropriate times.

In all seriousness, it's been a fantastic journey, filled with unforgettable moments and wonderful people. Thank you for being an amazing part of my life. Don't think of this as goodbye--consider it a well-deserved break from my constant coffee spillage incidents.

Here's to all of you, and to staying in touch...unless it's about borrowing that stapler again. Seriously, Carol, we need to talk about that!

Cheers!
