

Ladies and gentlemen, esteemed colleagues, and cherished friends,
Today, I stand before you not as someone who faced rejection, but as someone who has encountered an opportunity for growth. When I received the letter informing me that my application to medical school was not successful, it felt like a door had been closed. However, I have come to realize that sometimes closed doors lead us to new and unexpected paths. This moment is not the end of my journey; rather, it is a chance to strengthen my resolve and refine my purpose. Rejection is not a reflection of our worth or potential; it is a stepping stone towards our ultimate goals. Every great achievement is built on perseverance and the ability to rise after a fall.

I am grateful for the lessons learned through this experience and for the support of those around me. With renewed determination, I will continue to pursue my passion for medicine and healing, knowing that each step I take brings me closer to realizing my dream.

Let us all remember that our aspirations are not confined to a single decision or moment. We have the power to shape our future, and with hope and resilience in our hearts, there's nothing we cannot achieve.

Thank you.
