

Ladies and gentlemen,

Today, I stand before you with a mix of disappointment and determination. Recently, I received news that my application to medical school was not accepted. While this was not the outcome I had hoped for, it has provided me with an invaluable opportunity for reflection and growth.

First, I want to express my gratitude to the admissions committee for considering my application. The feedback I received highlighted areas where I can improve, and I am committed to addressing these aspects to become a stronger candidate in the future.

This experience has taught me the importance of resilience and perseverance. My passion for medicine remains undeterred, and I am more motivated than ever to pursue this path. I plan to gain further experience in the field, to expand my knowledge and skills, and to reapply with renewed vigor.

To my fellow applicants who faced similar outcomes, know that this moment does not define us. It is a stepping stone in our journey. Let's use this as fuel to grow, to learn, and to ultimately succeed in achieving our dreams.

Thank you.
