

Ladies and gentlemen,

Today, I stand before you with a message grounded in determination and forward-thinking strategy. As some of you may know, I recently faced a setback: I did not receive admission to the medical school I applied to. However, this moment is not one of defeat but of re-evaluation and growth.

Rejection, while challenging, serves as a critical learning experience. It is an opportunity to assess and refine our approach, to bolster our capabilities, and to emerge more prepared for future endeavors. I have already begun this process by analyzing the feedback provided, identifying areas for improvement, and setting new targets to enhance my skills and experiences.

Moving forward, I plan to gain further hands-on experience in the medical field, seek mentorship from esteemed professionals, and continue to excel academically. My goal is to re-apply with a stronger application that reflects both my commitment and the improvements I've made.

This journey reaffirms my dedication to the path of medicine. I am resolute in my aspiration to serve others as a healthcare professional, and I believe this set-back is but a stepping stone towards achieving that dream.

Thank you for your support and encouragement as I navigate this journey. Together, I am confident we can make the future brighter and more hopeful.

Thank you.
