

Hello everyone!

Wow, look at all these eager faces! Either you're excited to be here or you just realized you're sitting in the wrong room. If it's the latter, please stick around--you'll love it. And if not, don't worry, we won't tell anyone!

Welcome to your first day of orientation! Or as we like to call it, "The day of learning just enough to still get lost tomorrow." Remember, every expert was once a beginner who also couldn't find the restroom.

We've got a lot to cover today, but I'll do my best to keep it interesting. We'll go over the essentials: how to navigate the building without a GPS, which coffee machine is the best (spoiler: it's the one closest to you when you're half-asleep in the morning), and which meeting rooms have the comfiest chairs for napping--I mean, thinking hard at the end of a long day.

Feel free to ask questions, but remember, there's no such thing as a stupid question. Except the one you ask after the presentation when we all have pizza on our minds--anything between us and pizza is dangerous territory.

By the end of today, you'll be a pro at pretending you know what you're doing. But seriously, we're all here to help. Never hesitate to reach out because that's what teamwork--and avoiding awkward mistakes--is all about.

Alright, let's get you all oriented, caffeinated, and on your way to becoming the expert you're destined to be.

Welcome aboard, and let's have some fun!

Thank you!
