

Ladies and gentlemen,

Today, we must address a grave concern that affects countless lives-- systemic medical negligence. Imagine a world where patients seek care, hoping for relief, yet they encounter negligence that exacerbates their suffering.

Take, for instance, Mrs. Smith, who visited her local hospital with severe chest pain. Instead of receiving immediate attention, she was made to wait hours, dismissed with minimal examination. Days later, a heart attack revealed the neglect she faced when timely intervention could have saved her much distress.

This is not an isolated incident. Too often, stories like Mrs. Smith's unfold in our healthcare system. Patients, especially those from marginalized communities, find themselves at the mercy of a flawed system that overlooks their needs.

We must demand accountability. We must push for reforms that ensure all patients receive the timely, attentive care they deserve. It is time for change--a change where negligence is not tolerated, where every life is valued equally.

Thank you.
