Certainly! Here's a simple example of a speech for clarifying interdisciplinary collaboration requirements:

Ladies and gentlemen,

Thank you for joining us today to discuss the requirements for our interdisciplinary collaboration initiative. As we embark on this journey, it's crucial that we have a shared understanding of what is expected from all parties involved.

First and foremost, communication is key. We need to establish clear and open channels for regular updates and feedback. This means scheduling weekly meetings and utilizing collaborative tools that everyone can access.

Second, we must define our goals clearly. Each discipline brings its own expertise and perspective, which is vital for our success. Let's ensure that each team understands not only their own objectives but also how they contribute to the overall project goal.

Third, respect and flexibility are essential. As we work together, differences in methodologies and terminologies will arise. It's important that we respect these differences and remain flexible to adapt and integrate our diverse approaches.

Lastly, documentation is crucial for capturing our progress and decisions. Let's commit to maintaining detailed records of our meetings and key milestones, which will aid in aligning our efforts and ensuring accountability.

By adhering to these requirements, we can create a strong foundation for successful interdisciplinary collaboration. Together, we can achieve outcomes that are greater than the sum of our parts.

Thank you, and I look forward to our fruitful collaboration.

Feel free to modify this example to better fit your specific context or audience!