

Ladies and gentlemen, teachers and fellow survivors,
We've made it to the end of the academic jungle! Today is that magical day we've all been waiting for, like spotting a free seat on the bus or finding a bathroom with no line. It's graduation day!
As we stand on the precipice of adult life, or at the very least, longer Netflix binges, let's take a moment to remember our journey. Remember that time someone pulled all-nighters before an exam, only to find out it was postponed? Or when you accidentally called a teacher "Mom"? Good times.
Our teachers deserve a big shout-out too. Thank you for your patience, your wisdom, and for putting up with our endless questions. Like that time we asked you 17 times if the final would be multiple choice or if you could "curve us to an A?"
To our parents and guardians, thank you for everything. We know your main motivation was getting us out of the house, and today, we're halfway there!
And to my fellow classmates, while we may never use algebra again, we will carry the memories and life lessons learned here. Like learning that lunch ladies will always give you more fries if you smile and beg a little.
So, here's to us! May we stay in touch, may our futures be bright, and may none of us ever need to diagram another sentence again.
Congratulations, Class of [Year]! We did it!
Thank you!
