Certainly! Here's a simple example of a speech for a group interview with a collaborative-cooperative tone:

Hello everyone,

Firstly, thank you all for being here and for the opportunity to share this space with such a talented group of individuals. It's exciting to be part of a team where collaboration is key, and I'm eager to learn from each of you.

I believe that the strength of any team lies in our ability to listen, respect, and build upon each other's ideas. In my previous role at XYZ Company, I worked with diverse teams where we valued open communication and encouraged sharing perspectives. This not only brought about innovative solutions but also fostered a strong and inclusive working environment.

For instance, during a project for a major client, we faced a challenging problem. By coming together and pooling our unique skills and insights, we managed to create a strategy that not only met but exceeded the client's expectations. This experience taught me the power of cooperation and the impact it can have.

I'm here today because I understand the importance of teamwork in driving success, and I'm keen to contribute my skills and learn from all of you. I'm confident that by working together, we can achieve remarkable results and create an environment where everyone thrives.

Thank you for considering me, and I look forward to the possibility of working alongside such a dynamic group.

I hope this example provides a good sense of a collaborative and cooperative speech tone for a group interview.
