

Ladies and gentlemen,

Today, we stand at a crucial junction in our shared history. It is a time to acknowledge past injustices and commit to a brighter, more equitable future for all. The indigenous peoples of this land have long suffered from systemic injustices, their cultures marginalized, and their rights infringed upon.

Let us be resolute in our pursuit of justice. We must recognize their sovereignty and honor their rich heritage. Reparations are not just acts of goodwill; they are necessary steps towards healing and reconciliation. This is our opportunity to restore what has been lost and to right historical wrongs.

Together, let's forge a path that celebrates our diversity, empowers indigenous communities, and ensures their voices are at the forefront of shaping a just society. In unity and with determination, we can build a future where equality and respect are the cornerstones of our shared world.

Thank you.
